Report of Arab-IBM Sale Talks Draws Denial, Stirs Stock Action

CAIRO, Oct. 18 (Reuters).-A two-sentence report on the front page of today's edition of the newspaper Al Almam said that a consortium of Arab nations was negotiating to buy the International Business Machines Corp., a giant U.S. electronics company. The report stirred action on stock markets in the West and drew a denial from IBM.

The report, discounted by Western diplomats in Cairo, came from the official Middle East News Agency's London bureau, which attributed it to diplomatic sources in the British capital. No Arab countries in the reported consortium were identified.

IBM plays a vital role in American military technology, and a U.S. official in Washington noted that the firm would lose millions of dollars in defense contracts if it were taken over by foreign interests. At IBM's headquarters in Armonk, N.Y., the company's chairman, Frank Cary, said "there was no truth to the rumor," that an Arab consortium was negotiating to buy the computer

Observers here pointed out that the fact that such a report could cause a stir on the world's stock markets was a powerful demonstration of the Arabs' new financial influence.

In Paris, IBM shares, which closed at 837 francs on the Bourse yesterday, rose sharply and broke the 900-franc mark before settling back and closing at 895 today.

Russia Agrees to Increase Emigration Rate Sharply

Clears Way For Easing U.S. Trade

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18 (IHT).

-The Soviet Union has agreed to sharp increases in the number of people who will be permitted to emigrate, clearing the way for increased U.S.-Soviet trade, it was announced here today.

Sen Henry Jackson, D-Wash, said at a news conference at the White House after meeting with President Ford that the "historic" accord relaxing Soviet emigration rules will bring about quick congressional approval of a trade bill giving Moscow most-favored-nation status, granting it nondiscrimination tariff treatment and credits.

The three-sided involving Congress, the Ford ad-ministration and the Soviet Union, provides that Moscow will increase issuance of exit visas for an estimated 130,000 Soviet nationals—many of them Jews—who have asked to emigrate. Sen. Jackson said the accord would mean at least 60,000 people would emigrate annually.

It also provides that the Eremin will refrain from pumitive ac-tions or "unreasonable" impedi-ments against those wanting to leave and will continue to with-hold the "so-called emigration tax," which took the possessions of many of those previously allowed to depart.

Thirty-one thousand Jews. Tho make up most of the Soviet emigrants, were allowed to leave and 33,000 left last year. However, the sources said, the number this year will be only slightly more than 22,000 if the current flow is maintained. Led the Drive

They came by car, bus, blcycle and even by airplane from Addis Ababa to a mountainside about 15 miles north of here.

Despite a warning from the government last week against "illegal and unauthorized" meetings, the army made no more to break it up.

The purpose of the two successive meetings was to reunito the Liberation Front General Command and the People's Liberation Front. But there were conflicting reports about whether the front's two main factions were reconciled.

The two groups, which together have from 3,000 to 6,000 armed guerrillas inside Eritrea, have spent about as much time fighting each other as they have in battling the 20,000 army troops and police forces scattered across the province on the Red Ses

Reunification of the two main factions would appear crucial to any settlement of the war, which has resulted in the death of thousands of peasants, the destruction of the province's onceflourishing economy and the displacement of several hundred thousand farmers from their

There are immumerable mutually hostile factions extending from Arab Marxist separatists to moderate Christian federalists, making it nearly impossible to fathom the Eritrean front's polities. Thus it is difficult to measure the significance of front statements recently issued in several Arab capitals proclaiming an imminent general offensive.

Backing of Libys.

Libys, the single most important backer of the front's Mos-lem-dominated main faction, is reported to be pressing now for the movement to drop its demand for total secession and accept a federalist solution. The People's Liberation Front, more Christian than Moslem in membership, nas already accepted such an arrangement.

The change in Libyan policy has come after the ouster of Emperor Haile Selassie and the rise to power here of reform-minded military leaders such as those in Libya. Tripoli last week gave the Ethiopian military $1 million for drought relief as a sign of its support for the military govern-

'Photograph' Made of Largest Known Object

By Walter Sullivan NEW YORK, Oct. 18 (NYT) .-Dutch radio astronomers have "photographed" the largest object yet discovered in the universe. They used a multiple-antenna system of the type that won a Nobel Prize in physics this week for Dr. Martin Ryle, the head of the Radio Astronomy Group at Cambridge University in England

The photograph an image derived from radio emissions, was made available this week. It shows an object so far-flung that light, traveling at 188,000 miles a second, takes 18.6 million years to cross its width. It is about three times bigger than the largest previously known com-ponent of the universe.

Until now, it was believed that clusters of galaxies were the largest units. Some of them are beyond the constellation Leo Minor, far beyond the Milky Way galaxy and its neighbors. A somewhat smaller one has been found formed of several thousand salaxies, each comparable to the Way galaxy, to which the earth, sun and planets belong A typical cluster is about three million light years wide—that is, it takes light three million years to cross it, although a few are twice that size The newly found etructure lies

The governing board, which makes the fin'd decisions, is composed of ministers or delegates from each participant.

One of the more controversial elements of the treaty is a provision for weighted voting by the governing board on provisions of the treaty that are not automatic, particularly program management and procedural ques-tions. The treaty gives voting weight to participant countries in ratio to their oil consumption.

The combined vote total is 138. Of that the United States has votes, Japan 18, West Germany 12, Great Britain 10, Canada nine, and so on down. A majority requires 60 per cent of the total vote, plus a yes vote by at least six countries. Thus, though the United States, West Germany and Japan, for example, make up more than 60 percent of the weight, they would need three of the smaller countries to gain a majority.

Blocking a vote is easier. The United States, for example, with any one other country would have the 40 per cent weight necessary to block a majority On the other hand, the eight EEC countries, with any one other country, could do the

The real difficulty for the French, and for several other delegations that now support the treaty, was the feeling that this was a Washington-led enterprise. But sources on several of the delegations have indicated that the final treaty, particularly the more sensitive areas, such as voting weights, was the work of all 12 delegations.

tion Lynz. They are believed to have been produced by cataclysmic explosions within a central and relatively brilliant core. These explosions apparently generated jets of gas that are still flying out in opposite directions. The observed radio emissions are presumably produced by swirling motions within this gas. The picture has been derivphotograph was made available by Dr. Harry van der Lean of the university, whose astronomere use a national facility. Dr. van der Laan is visitat the Instituto for Advanced Study in Princeton, N.J.

On Tuesday, the day the Nobel awards in physics were announced another major discovery deriving from work for which the prize was given was described in presentation at the institute. It was the identification of a pulsar in orbit around an extremely dense object.

Pulsars are curious objects, far out in space, that regularly emit pulses of radio waves, generally at intervals of one-half to two seconds.

The discovery was reported by Dr. Joseph Taylor of the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, who, with Russell Hulse, found the object during a systematic search for new pulsars. Discovery of the first pulsars, in 1967, has won for Prof. Antony Hewish the Nobel Prize that he shares with Dr. Ryle.

The finding of a pulsar that is whirling in tight dircles with another object was hailed by theorists at the Instituto for Advanced Study as of major importance. The discovery, made with a giant dish antenna near Arecibo, Puerto Rico, was de-scribed as opening up a wide range of research opportunities.

There are opportunities for the manner in which their rhythmic radio pulses are generated and the precise effects of reistivity on time.

Because the pulsar, in its calculated orbit, seems to come close to a very massive object, the gravity of that object, according to the predictions of relativity, should make the pulse rate appear slower during each close

Indeed, one question about the Trish Republican Army, an illegal organization, is: How many friends does it have? No one really knows, although even its most bitter critics concede that deep in most Irish souls there is at least some admiration for "the boys," if not for their bombings. "Remember," someone said here the other day, "the first song a child learns in school in Ireland, and that it always has been, and that there's a tradition here of sheltering a man on the run. There aren't many Irish who will ignore it." Consequently, when 19 prison-ers, all Provisionals, escaped from Portleoise Prison in August some 600 policemen and soldiers, help-ed by helicopters dogs and

A week after the Portlaoise break, the Gardal, or police, ac-knowledged that sympathizers probably were sheltering the men. Hardly anyone seemed surprised by the completely successful getaway.

Neither the government nor the Gardal will estimate the size of the IRA Because of the complicated waye of Irish politics, they probably do not know. The IRA is itself split into factions, the Provisionals and the Officials, and, while neither side shuns violence, the Official line is that it should be used only against military, not civilian targets.

The Provisionals have been less particular about violence, and in Northern Ireland they kill civilians. It is probable that the Provisionals are younger, less Marxist, and sometimes more nural, more Celtic and more "green," as they say, than the Officials, Provisionals have moved to the left and ostensibly, at least, have become Marxist. In the way of small parties, Official and Provisional Sinn Fein can disagree on small things. On Easter Sundays they sell peper lillies to commemorato the 1916 rising. They do this without licenses, which makes their sales illegal.

While Provisional Sinn Fein sells its lillies with pins attached to them, Official Sinn Fein sells its lillies with stickers on them. Consequently, a Provisional Sinn

Dutch Investigating Deputies" For Delaying Bribe Report

THE HAGUE, Oct. 18 (UPI).— The public prosecutor said here today that he will investigate whether two members of parlia-ment can be impeached for not reporting immediately alleged bribery attempts by the French Dassault aircraft company.

The bribery charge was denied by Dassault, which is competing with two U.S. firms and a Swedish company for contracts worth at least $2 billion to replace the F-104 Starfighter jet, currently in service in four Western European air forces, including that of the Netherlands.

By Martin Arnold WASHINGTON, Oct. 18 (NYT). -President Ford last night vetoed a measure that would have made government-held information more accessible to the public. The legislation, in the form of amendments to the Freedom of Information Act, was over-whelmingly passed by Congress, but was opposed by virtually and agency. Most of the pressure against the amendments came from the Justice Department, the National Security Council and other de-

The President said that he would submit his own legislation to amend the act.

The original bill, passed in 1966, was signed by former Pres-ident Lyndon Johnson although virtually all agencies opposed it A key provision authorized persons to file a complaint in U.S District Courts to force a government agency to produce in-formation and authorized the courts to punish officials who did not comply. Exempted from this were medical reports, the agencies' internal rules and regulations, trade secrets and foreign policy and national defense information that had been classified secret by executive order.

U.S. District Court Judge Warren Urbom found Reginald Dodge, Colin Wesaw, Mark Fleury and Larry Johns guilty of a conspiracy to "obstruct, impede or in-terfere with" U.S. marshals and FBI agents during the 71-day occupation of Wounded Knee, located on the Pine Ridge Reservation. Fleury was also convicted of second-degree burglary end simple

Judge Urbom then scheduled a Dec. 18 hearing to determine whether the convictions violated the treaty between the Oglala Sioux and the federal government. The hearing will center on whether the treaty is valid and whether it prohibits the FBI and federal marshals from operating on the reservation.

Oil-Price Mirage

The optimistic noises about a reduction in oil prices that accompanied Secretary of State Kissinger's Mideast travels undoubtedly need to be taken with a barrel of salt. Kissinger's diplomatic offensive and other forms of "jawboning" are unlikely to have much effect so long as the fundamental power balance and supply-demand situation remain

Mr. Kissinger reports a pledge from King Faisal to use his influence within the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to help bring down the oil price. That pledge ... is useful in the light of the King's reputation for veracity in personal dealing; but he has ruled out unflateral action. The probabil-Ity is that he counts it a near-certainty that his appeals to the other OPEC countries for lower prices will fall on deaf ears.

Algerian President Houari Boumedienne reportedly gave Kissinger the impression that he would oppose further price increases at the December OPEC meeting. Secretary Kissinger may have reason therefore for his confidence that a further price increase will be avoided at this time. But that is a long way from achieving the price reduction he and President Ford have urged both publicly and privately as vital to the economic and political stability of the West.

The central issue remains supply and demand. The oil producers' cartel has reduced production to eliminate a surplus; the OPEC countries could produce six million barrels a day, almost 20 per cent, more than they are pumping today. The troublesome element is that world demand remains roughly as high as it was a year ago despite fourfold increase in price. For all the talk about energy conservation in Western nations and Japan, consumption almost everywhere has crept back close to the pre-

Only a major conservation effort by the oil-consumer countries, led by the United States, could create the realistic possibility of a price drop. A major cutback in demand of up to 15 per cent, as urged by Secretary Kissinger, would confront the Arab countries with a far more difficult problem than they now have in allocating production cuts.

Under such circumstances, a negotiation between producer and consumer nations might become possible. The oil producers need guarantees and help from the industrial nations if their earnings—which will be enormous at any likely price-are to he invested securely and profitably for the long term. Such a negotiation will be feasible if the Ford administration shows the way to the consumer countries with a drastic program of curbing the use of gasoline.

Dividing the Air Lanes

The five-year agreement made by Pan American World Airways and Trans World Airlines to divide up major routes across the Atlantic and Pacific makes good business sense for both financially troubled carriers. A heavy responsibility now rests on the Civil Aeronautics Board and President Ford to review each specific exchange of routes in terms of its potential impact on the public.

The root of the money squeeze that impelled Pan Am to make its unsuccessful bid last month for $125 million a year in federal subsidies has been the enormous over-capacity in competitive international flights by United States and foreign airlines, a situation made worse by the falloff in travel caused by inflation and the skyrocketing of operating costs as a result of the tripling of jet fuel bills.

Pan Am and TWA have had to combat the additional handicaps thrust upon them by discriminatory rates for carrying mail and unfair differentials in landing charges at a few airports overseas. They have also had to pay standard interest rates on hank loans to finance the purchase of jumbo jets while many of their foreign-flag competitors obtained loans at much lower rates from the Export-Import Bank. Even though some of these handicaps are in process of mitigation, the squeeze on Pan Am and TWA is still so severe that rationalization of service patterns through a division of worldwide routes represents an indispensable form of economy.

Desperate as is this need, however, it is not desperate enough to justify the extreme pressure currently being put on the CAB to give lightning-like approval to the whole package with detailed examinaton of the possible adverse effect of snuffing out competition. Congressional supporters of the two airlines are ill-serving their public responsibility by aeeking to stampede the federal regulatory agency into over-quick validation of every element in the deal.

The prospects for the commercial viability of both air carriers now seem promising enough to encourage the banks to keep them flying. Those prospects will not be enhanced if the throttling of competition results in unfair advantage to both airlines at the expense of the public, with a further drastic drop in air travel.

that Senate and House committees proceed with all possible speed to hold open hearings at which the questions raised about his nomination to the vice-presidency can be fully explored.

The Senate Rules Committee has agreed to reconvene on Nov. 13, eight days after the congressional elections, to hear Mr. Rockefeller's explanations. In the meantime, dribs and drabs of information about Mr. Rockefeller and the Rockefeller family-much of it distorted-will keep filtering into newspapers, magazines and television programs, feeding the public's legitimate interest in the qualifications of a man appointed to a post that would put Nelson Rockefeller was justified in urging him in direct line of possible succession to the presidency.

> If Mr. Rockefeller were proposing a coverup aimed at closing off public access to the facts about him and his record, his request for speedy hearing would be entitled to no standing. But the vice-president-designate was asking just the opposite-full exposure before the bodies officially charged with the initial duty of assessing his fitness.

It is in the public's interest, as well as his, to move ahead promptly. Chairman Cannon of the Senate Rules Committee reports that the audit of the Rockefeller tax returns will be completed early next week. Once that information is at hand, we see every reason to proceed expeditiously with full public hearings.

U.S. Aid to Turkey

President Ford's battle with the U.S. Congress over American military aid to Turkey looked to be shaping up for a compromise after the President had successfully applied his second veto within the week. The White House thought it had already got the compromise it wanted by an agreement that the ald would be cut off after Dec. 10 unless Mr. Ford determined that its continuance would encourage further negotiations toward a Cyprus peace settlement. But at the last minute the House accepted an amendment under which the aid would be cut off in any case if Turkey sent more arms or equipment to its forces in Cyprus. It was this which incurred the second presidential veto. Quite rightly so, too. Turkey has 40,000 troops in Cyprus and obviously has to supply them somehow, if only with food and water.

Avoiding Mideast Stagnation

As Jerusalem sees it, Kissinger did not stop off in Riyadh, Algiers and Morocco just to take the heat out of the oil situation, he was also aiming to persuade those Arab states not directly involved in the territorial conflict to adopt a moderate attitude. But in any case, Rahin is approaching a delicate period. Kissinger's deliberate, purposeoriented optimism has aroused hopes that will have to be fulfilled if the situation in the Middle East is not to stagnate anew. If Israel is euccessful in limiting negotiations entirely to the Sinai Peninsula, further progress may be expected. But if Sadat were to insist on simultaneous steps on Golan and Jordan, he would embarrass even the most accommodating Israeli minister. Kissinger seems, however, to have reassured Rabin, helieving he has convinced the Arabs it would be counter-productive to face the Israelis with the alternative hetween concessions or

A Vote for Not Selling Ford Short

By James Reston

WASHINGTON-The guess here is that President Ford has much more support with the American people than he has in the Congress, the press, or the universities. The popularity polls may not show it yet, and his policies on the economy and the Nixon pardon do not support it, but there is something about this man that makes people believe in him, even when they disagree with his decisions.

His appearance before members of the House Judiciary Committee to explain why he pardoned former President Nixon helps explain the paradox. He didn't satisfy many members of the committee that his decision, and particularly the timing of his decision, was right, but he satisfled even the members who thought he was wrong that he was bonest and telling the truth.

This is a big advance in Washington. It has long been argued by political cynics that cumning and devious leaders with good intentions do less damage than honest naive men, and it may he true. But after a decade of clever twisters at the top of the American government, Ford is a tem-porary relief, even if he's wrong.

The Key Word

The key word, of course, is good intentions, locker-room ex-hortations, and "WIN" buttons won't solve the economic crisis, but in dealing with the Nixon pardon, Ford at least tried to restore the missing sense of trust, which is essential to the resolution of all our other problems.

The Ford contrast with Nixon and Johnson is startling. The tragedy of Vietnam and Watergate was not the original policies but the cover-ups. Johnson took Nixon into Watergate by stealth, both deceiving and evading the Congress when they got in trouble. The comparison is unfair and the analogy inaccurate, but Ford, when he got in trouble on the pardon, at least had the gumption to face the opposition.

Obviously, it was an easier problem, but Ford's instinct was true. He decided not only to answer the questions of the House Judiciary Committee, but to appear before them, state his case, and answer their questions. In the process, he destroyed the ontrageous Nixon claims of excessive "executive privilege," and set a precedent of presidential accountability that may be much more important than what happens to Nixon.

In the process, he expanded national television into the democratic process, not only on judging candidates, but on deciding basic issues of policy. Now we have not only a "question hour" between the President and the Congress, as between the Prime Minister in

From Ford's point of view, this historic appearance in the dock of the Congress and before a national television audience was a brilliant political decision, all the more so because it was prob-ably not calculated, but came as a natural response to serious estions from his old colleagues in the House of Representatives. He didn't have to go to Capital

Well, maybe his judgment was wrong, for by pardoning Nixon before indictment or conviction, he didn't end the Watergate controversy but revived it. Nevertheless, he insisted that a struggle in the courts and press would have diverted the country from its serious problems at home and abroad, that, anyway, Nixon had resigned "under shame and disgrace," and that, by agreeing to

This change in mood is reflected in diplomatic reality even if those involved firmly believe their policies are unaltered. There is more of a tendency toward piecemeal approach to mutual nonheliteerency with the Arabs even before final frontiers are fixed.

The United States remains committed to a secure Israel. However, the definition is less influenced than before by ambitious Israeli interpretations. And the Israelis are increasingly aware of the overriding need to adjust their future to harmonious relations with their Arab neighbors-even if they must pay more for this than previously imagined.

They see a growing gap hetween the attitude of their own older generation of belligerent pioneers and its children who are less adamant and even less "European" in their outlook.

Momentum

If Kissinger can maintain the momentum he has sought to revive on his latest diplomatic foray, these changes in mood-on the Arab side as well as the Israeli side-may soon be reflected. After all, the most religious Arab leader, King Feisal of Saudi Arabia, is now talking of Israel as a state that exists and of regaining for the Arabs only East Jerusalem, not the entire

That may imply little to Israelis. Yet, it represents a considerable shift in position. And though Israel remains adamant about not ceding an inch of the Holy City, it now quietly discusses getting guaranteed supplies of Sinsi oil when that peninsula reverts to Egypt.

NICOSIA, Oct. 18 (UPI).-A Cypriot government spokesman today termed as "constructive" the compromise reached between President Ford and Congress on continuing military aid to Turkey.

"Tha terms laid down in the agreed formula which may be described as constructive clear and leave no room for any doubt," he said.

The compromise hy Congress yesterday, authorized the continuance of military aid to Turkey until Dec. 10 as long as Ankara did not aship any moore U.S.-supplied weapons to Cyprus. Turkish forces invaded the Mediterranean island on July 20 after a coup ousted Archbishop Makaries as president. The Turks control about 40 per cent of Cyprus.

"The outcome of the discussions in the United States concerning continuation or not of American military aid to Turkey constitutes the most eloquent recognition of the crime which has been committed against Cyprus," the Cyprint spokesman said.

Injustice' Seen

He said Greek Cypriots expected the U.S. sovernment "to exercise all its influence to lift the injustice against Cyprus, which to a great extent was committed through the illegal use of American ammunition.

A government statement said three U.S.-made Turkish planes flew over Cyprus today. Govern-ment sources said the overflights constituted violations of the Aug. 20 cease-fire and thus came under provisions of the U.S. aid-to-Turkey bill.

Greek Cypriots and Turkish Cypriots resumed their prisoner exchanges, suspended three weeks ago over a dispute regarding Greek Cypriot prisoners held in Turkey.

A UN spokesman said today's exchange included 300 Greek Cypriots and 354 Turkish Cypriots. He said the Greek Cypriots had been shipped from prison camps

Further Exchanges Cypriot President Glafkos Clerides said more POWs would be released tomorrow. "We hope that all prisoners and detainees will be released within two weeks," Mr. Clerides said. He said between 1.500 and 1.800 Greek Cyprints still were being held in Turkey.

peals. Mr. Flanigan's nomination was submitted by Mr. Ford, while both Mr. Silbert and Gov. Mes-kill were nominated by former President Richard Nixon.
The Senate's rules provide that all nominations not acted on at the time it adjourns or recesses for more than 30 days shall be returned to the President and not considered further unless resubmitted. Senate Minority Leader Hugh Scott, R-Pa., said he expects Mr. Ford to review the three nominations before deciding whether to resubmit.

The pomination of Mr. Flanigan has generated controversy because of his involvement in the ITT anti-trust case and charges that he helped to arrange for large campaign contributors to get appointments as ambassadors. Mr. Flanigan, who was an adviser to Mr. Nixon on international economic affairs, has denied any wrongdoing or improprieties in testimony he gave to the Senate Foreign Relations

Mr. Silbert, nominated by Mr. Nixon in January has run into opposition from Sen. Sam Ervin jr., D-N.C., who was chairman of the Senate's special Watergate investigating committee. Lying on camp beds in the lowceilinged crypt of the neo-classical Catholic church, the six Algerians said that they would leave the crypt alive only if the government guaranteed them full citizenship as a reward for fighting under the French flag during the Algerian war.

The hunger strike served as one more reminder that although 12 years had elapsed since the end of the seven-year Algerian con-flict that cost the lives of thousands and forced 1.5 million French settlers to flee from Algeria, the aftermath of the conflict is still in evidence in France and the former colony.

Margherita Benetti, Museum of Art, Palazzo dei Ferrara. Italy, Diamanti. through Nov. 5.

One of the most individual printmakers in Italy, Margherita Benetit is showing a damling group of new etchings and aquatints, along with some older work, in this prestigious setting. Her new work, produced in only three months from very large plates, is always pervaded by an earthbound drama. But it also displays a new sureness and an even more varied play of imagination. "The Part That Is Still." the title recet often used, means the holding of breath, the wonder before unfolding. A happy new invention, a rhombold shape is used to express this infinite variation. The lozenges travel, hang in space, cluster and swarm, break and fan apart.

These abstractions—just because there is no specific reference-are all the more intense for their mood and poetry. Their complexity is held in balance by Benettl's strength of vision, but also by her mastery of her medium.

Tuma handles an ascetic theme with an aesthetic craft. His paintings are beautifully painted surfaces that purportedly depict landscapes. Landscape painting seems such an obvious form today that it requires an effort to remember that it appeared at the new philosophical concept of the infinity of nature. Tuma's landscapes are the contrary of infinity. They use the inverse perspective of medieval art and of the icon painters (the far side of the table is wider than the near side) and they are merely al-veolated metal structures or neatly segmented pieces of sod which suggest somehow that infinity has been parcelled and packaged by real-estate specula-tors. Collages (anatomical drawings of a horse's hoof, fragments of leather); frottages (magazine photos of sexy nudes); delicately meticulous drawings. The point resides in the juxtaposition of the idealized image (sexy dream-girl), its symbolic dissection and a vestige of skin to attest that the job has been done. The catalogue text, in a ridiculous piece of pseudo-politgraphs have such success at anctions today. But the striking fact remains that very good prints now sell for what good watercolors of the same period were fetching five years ago. Demand is rising for photo landscapes, particularly urban scenes such as those made by Thomas Annan of Glasgow, He had a genius for chieroscuro that has not been surpassed. Beween 1868 and 1877, he made a series of pictures of Glasgow slums and of the working class which could easily illustrate Dickens's novels. A set of 40 carbon prints of. his was published for the City of Glasgow Improvement Trust 1877 in large format, some big as 29 by 37.5 centimeters, under the title "Old Glasgow." It made £3,500 at the Sotheby's Beigravia sale today.

One set was thought so good that it was engraved by Annan from the black and white prints. The engravings were then published with an introduction by William Young. These engraving showed the closes and many old (medieval to 18th-century) buildings on the main street as well as the famous Gorbals section,

Most of the photographs used in the engraved edition were taken in 1868, with a few as late as 1899. When the first copy of the magnificent 1900 book came up for sale at Sotheby's Beigravia on March 8, tt sold for £2,000 to an unnamed institution. The quality of the work is as good as that of Cartier-Bresson's, Today, a copy was knocked down for £500. Another set part of the 100 copies printed for the Corporation of Glasgow, was sold for £625. In June, when a copy made £1,000, other copies of the book began coming out of the woodwork. Collectors now realize that it not such a rarity after all. Prices in the trade have been ranging from £500 to £800, which is still incredibly expensive.

The photos were made by one G. Koppmann in October, 1888. Philippe Garner, Sotheby's Beigravia specialist in photography, says he has never seen any Kopymann photos bemeentary value. Old Hamburg was wiped out forever by British air raids in 1944 and only photographs of this kind remain to bear witness to the astoniahing medieval streets lined by halftimbered houses. A desire to recapture the past is probably at the root of the sudden blossoming of the photo market. This is why the Koppmenn album fetched £650 this morning.

The market for old photos was created three years ago at a sale of British pointings at Christie's, Included in it 200 photos taken by Mrs. Cam-Everyone was surprised when they fetched high prices. Christie's then put together an important all-photo sale in 1973 and, since then, has been holding three or four major sales a year, Now, however, Sotheby's Beigravia, where Philippe Garner has been specializing in photography for the past three years, is shead of Christie's. On the whole, the number of buyers is small. Less than a dozen London dealers are sericoncerned with photography. About 20 institutions in the world are snapping up the finest pieces. These institutions are not particularly affected by the economic crisis. Neither is the casual buyer who pays £15 to £20 for a print. This is why the category is flourishing while others flounder.

The £40,000 album went to a Swiss collector. But the main interest comes from institutions, officers, "are not gentlemen." Enter Colonel von Schmettau, the German commanding officer, who appears to be both. The dame is visibly relieved when her husband is able to find the colonel listed in the "Almanac De Gotha" he is not only a count but also has impressive relations and, even though the enemy, is one of them. After that, the play contents itself with observing the growing friendship between the colonel and the dame, who can appreciate each other's breeding and who combine to put the lowlyborn 5S type in his place. The code of the aristocrats is seen as stronger than that of nationality, with each of them rising above the nasty actualities of a war in which both sides fight in dishonorable ways.

its clarity, so that the pieces of this rather confused play fall neatly into place, and for conjuring the golden atmosphere of a love story out of what is usually done as an anti-feminist tract.

Susan Hampshire's somewhat tame Katharine, teasing rather than shrewish, contributes to the overall benevolence of the production and there is a fine vigorous performance from Nicky Henson as Petruchio and excellent comedy from Barrie Rutter as Grumio. Druno Santini's set makes the most of a broad stage.

At the Roundhouse, Ghiliano Vasilico's production of "120 Days of Sodom," described as "an Italian delirium of the Marquis de Sade" has arrived in London after touring the Continent for the last two years, to much praise. It was originally done in Rome in 1972 and is regarded there as the most notable dramatic event of the year, although it is difficult to understand why.

The stacing is sometimes effective, as actors are wheeled on and off stage on small trolleys, striking attitudes all the while, but the work seems hardly a delirium and makes little attempt to come to terms either with Sadc's perverted sexuality or his complex philosophy.

At the Place, Victor Lanoux's "The Can Opener," adapted from French by Charles Wood, is standard post-apocalyose theater with two characters stranded in a subway, playing games to pass the time. It suggests that it is time the characters of experimental drama stopped waiting for Godot and started looking for

West Germany's Finance Minister, Hans Apel, announced Wednesday that his cabinet decided to guarantee up to 44.04 per cent of a community bond,

While the Bonn government said its condition for adopting the fund-raising mechanism is that a ceiling should be placed for 1975 at $3 billion, the commission proposal did not suggest any restriction on the size of

But commission officials noted that within the mechanism it is clearly stated that a community bond can be floated only by unanimous decision of the EEC's ministerial council.

Germans Can Veto

"If the Germans don't want to raise more than $3 billion in a year, they can veto any fund raising beyond that "mount," a commission spokesman said.

Under the commission propos items such as the final financial conditions will have to be agreed on in the council It also will obliga recipients of proceeds to adhere to stringent economic conditions that the council may impose with any lendines. This is meant to avoid any country piling up debts while neglecting economic measures that may improve its payments situation

Commission officials appeared certain their proposal will be adopted by the finance ministers next Monday.

el Saving Is the Only Solution for U.S. placed a curb on gasoline consumption at the top of its list of priorities to conserve energy, mostly because gasoline use constitutes as much as one-fifth of U.S. energy use. The report said the United States should limit energy consumption's growth to

2 per cent a year, down from an average increase of 4.5 per cent a year for the last eight years. Until 1985 "The slowdown from present growth rates," the report said, "would mean that from now energy demand without resorting to developments that threaten grave environmental damage. It would not be necessary to embark on large-scale development of Western coal and shale, nor would massive new commitments to nuclear power, increased off imports or offshore oil development in undisturbed areas be required" before 1985. Besides asking curbs on gasoline consumption, the project made three other recommendations. One is to encourage more efficient heating and cooling of buildings, by setting higher gov-ernment standards for buildings' insulation and heating and cooling systems. Another is to increase government research into wave of conserving energy, long neglected. The project said the government should also stress conservation in all its purchases—thriftier cars, buildings and recycled materials.

Finally, the study suggested that electricity rates be calculated entirely differently from the way they are now. Instead of largest monthly gain since May. The Department of Employment said last month's increase was due to higher prices "for clothing, eggs and many other goods and Services." In August the retail price index gain of 0.1 per cent was the smallest in three years, but this was mainly due to the government's decision to lower the value-added tax to 8 from 10 per cent and grant additional relief on real estate taxes. The seasonal drop in most food prices curbed the rise in prices that month.

The government has said it is making progress in slowing the rate of inflation. The retail price index has risen 9.3 points since being at 1017 at the end of February, when Prime Minister Harold Wilson's party won the Quite possibly the most beautiful desk book ever designed. Certainly for businessmen in the European Economic Community it's the most informative, most practi-cal, most useful. Nothing quite like it exists in any other form.

The International Herald Tribune is pleased to make available to its readers this magnificent reference book and daily agenda. Published in close association with the EEC itself and its various departments, the directory is a veritable goldmine of information for libraries, government, business, industry and the professions. And its almost 400 pages have been edited by the Irish Institute of Public Administration and have been superbly produced in Ireland – where book making is still a fine art.

The directory pages – 248 of them – contain just about everything there is to print about the EEC its offices, its officers, its treaties, committees, vital statistics. Complete right down to a glossary of terminology; full-color maps; all the necessary weights and measures with conversion tables; lists of lobby groups and pressmen measures with conversion tables; lists of lobby groups and pressmen accredited to the Community; press officers; even telephone numbers (with international dialing codes). And infinitely more.

The diary pages — 112 in all — provide what may well be the most practical and easy to-use daily agenda available anywhere. For both future appointments and as a record of past activities. Annotated with holidays, fairs, conventions, sporting events.

The entire handsome volume is available to International Herald Tribune readers at the following special prices (which include postage and handling): Within the U.K. and Ireland $25.30 / Elsewhere in Europe $25.90 / U.S.A. and Canada $28.20 / Other countries $30.55. countries $30.55.

Send the coupon today for your copy or opies. Because while you're almost certain to want the 1975 European Community Directory and Diary for your own desk, you should think about this beautiful book as a Christmas gift for friends and business associates. Books will be mailed from end October.

THE 158-POUND MARRIAGE

By John Irving. Random House. 245 pp. $5.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

JOHN IRVING'S title suggests that marriage is a middleweight attempt to solve heavyweight problems, a shaky structure for controlling the unconble, a strategy for lulling ego into habits and security ie hope that it will forget austian hunger. "The 158d Marriage" depicts that tution as a precarious bal-ng, and immobilizing, of the for novelty that, according reud, is an inherent instain our makeup. Our chilone of the book's characters are the "adventurous, extive" element in our married lives. Through them, we can still "live dangerously." Wives or husbands, he adds, are almost "rational" choices.

Not every husband or wife would be satisfied with these equations, and the two couples who make up the main characters of "The 158-Pound Marriage" are not. To the naked eye, they seem to be doing all right. Each couple is very close and sexually compatible. They are not bored. They enjoy their work and their children. But their never-resting minds—they But are all what we call "complicat ed" people—cannot resist the enormous "if" implied in simply being alive. A permanent settle ment-no matter how vital or dynamic-seems to be a kind of death for them.

Severin Winter and his wife, Edith, enter into a "swapping" exchange with the unnamed narrator and his wife, Utch, because "things were not equal between them" and they groped towards an adjustment in obedience to the new demand for equality. Severin had unintentionally fallen into a claudestine affair, and his wife had discovered it. As a result, both felt that he "owed" her something. And since clandestine affairs were, by definition, sneaky or furtive, they decided to work off their emotional disequilibrium in a fully-shared foursome. So much for rationality.

One day, Severin finds a pair of the other husband's undershorts mixed among his in his drawer. A former wrestler he seizes them and stretches the waistband as far as he can, as if to ask: How elastic is marriage? Already, he has begun to resent the intrusion of the other man. In a richly ambiguous gesture, the narrator's wife goes even further: she slits the crotches of all her husband's

Her gesture implies that the bottom, the basis, the fit, the utility, have all gone out of their marriage. True, they have experienced a wild and thrilling rebirth of sexual desire-but. just as money once was, sex is now seen as the root of all evil. Both couples virtually forget their children, for example. And then, like money. sex also becomes a symbol of power and greed. Is one partner getting more satisfaction than the other? Are they giving up too much control of themselves in the scramble for sensation? Is it true, as Severin says, after the fact, that polymorphous perversity properly pertains to 4-yearolds?

The narrator and Severin's wife. Edith, are both Americans and writers: they are also least disturbed by the swapping. Severin and Utch are Europeans-8 wrestler and a peasant-who, as children, have suffered in World War II, and there seems to be an invidious comparison implied here. Severin and Utch are earthy, physically strong, direct while the narrator and Edith, tall, thin and correspondingly unearthy, are the sort of people who experience things vicariously, who are crippled as a "trained wild man . . . crude and chivalrous, romantic and practical": that is, human.

It is this typical intolerance of ambiguity that puts an end to their ménage à quatre. Severin, the wrestler, the grappler with issues, feels that Edith is getting some intangible benefit out of the arrangement that he isn't. It all comes down, Mr. Irvine implies to a quantitative quarrel. A disappointing answer to such a provocative question Convention turns out to be the optimum level of control. Severin and Edith reconcile themselves to the hard facts of compromise, or sublimation, Preud described it in "Civilization and Its Discontents."

Another invidious comparison: While the other couple are, at least temporarily, satisfied with their re-established fidelity, the American narrator cannot seem to effect a reconciliation with his European mate. She loves Severin now, and blames her husband for "not looking out for her." The narrator's historical novels are "too lightweight"; only Severin and Utch know how heavy history really is. He re-claims his in his wife and children and Utch goes back to Europe, leaving the narrator stripped of his past, in order to recover her own. Mr. Irving seems to be saying that, unless we Americans start seriously grappling with our national and sexual history, we are lost. Though there is some truth in this, he exaggerates In taking intellectuals as representative Americans, he flatters and slanders them at the same time. And his book, to borrow one of his own phrases, merely "stumbles toward profundity."

In an era of workhorse relief pitching, Mershall was working for the fifth time in a five-game match. But Oakland produced an iron man of its own: Rollie Fingers, the man with the Sven-gali mustache who appeared 76 times during the six-month reg-ular season and four times in the series. Some of the best men on the Oakland team were still demanding to be traded from Finley's heavy-handed grip. The best pitcher, Jun (Cathin) Hunter, was still pursuing a grievance claim for half his $100,000 salary and his outright release. And there were reminders of the cas-tomary bickering in a season that was enlivemed by a fistfight or two and by the best record in recent times—four Western Division titles in a row, three American League pennants in a row three world championships

Brawling A's All Smiles In Victory

By Bob Addie OAKLAND, Oct. 18 (WP). —Quiet Joe Rudi, whose seventh-inning home run last night provided the margin that gave the Oakland A's a 3-2 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers, turned unexpected spokesman for his brawling buddies. "Nobody ever believes we're good team," he said. Cincinnati Reds didn't believe it in 1972; the Mets didn't believe it in 1973, and the Dodgers didn't believe it this year. Now they've got all winter to think about it. We've made believers of them

Oakland outfielder Reggie Jackson stripped some of the dignity from Commissioner Bowie Kuhn by dousing him with champagne and then, soggy commissioner on the cheek. Jackson had been reprimanded by Kuhn for threatening a newspaperman. The A's hug-ged each other and owner Charles Finley, their target all year as an unfeeling boss for the peon ballplayers. Even Gene Tenace, who publicly has scolded Finley, was in a generous mood. First-baseman Tenace, who was voted the most valuable player of the 1973 series, was furious because he didn't start the last two games. But perhaps the thought of a check of $25,000 made him more tractable.

Asked if he felt he had contributed to the A's in this series. Tenace replied, "T've contributed in 160 games I played this season and in the playoffs and in the first three games of the World Series. As far as coming back to Oakland next year-yes, I expect to be Alvin Dark, manager of the A's, isn't sure he will be back next year, despite his victory. He could become the only manager ever fired after winning a World Series. Dick Williams, his predecessor, quit after winning his second world title last year. Yogi Berra was fired by the Yankees in 1964 after losing to the Cardinals in seven games.

Asked if he had been invited back by Finley for next year, Dark said: "I honestly have not had any talks with Mr. Finley in that direction. All I've been concerned about was winning this series. People won't understand, but I want to say: 'Glory be to God.' I have relied on God all year long-I always rely on Him-win or lose.

"Now, as to my future, I'm appreciative for the chance Mr. Finley gave ma to manage this club. I was playing golf last year at this time and had no idea of managing-although I wanted to come back to baseball.

French Pursuing The Right Number

PARIS (IHT).—There is always a terrific amount of art news in Paris in the autumn, and this year offers the bonus of the big impressionist show So heated is the pace, in fact, that the National Archives have thoughtfully prepered an exhibit on Louis-Philippe a French king noted for his pear-shape, general dreariness and habit of carry-ing an umbrella—that should be as soothing as six Valtums to the fevered art lover.

This preface is really by way. of an excuse for not writing earlier about a show that has just closed, but which drew such crowds that it seems worth mentioning even after the fact. It was an outdoor show on the Left Bank, held in an area roughly situated between the Rodin Museum and Calder's UNESCO stabile, and it was devoted to telephone booths. Telephone booths, 17 of them, from eight countries! And, despite the key cold and rain, the crowds were dense.

There were people opening booth doors, testing dialing mechanisms, discussing form and color, and carefully noting their opinions on ballots provided by the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications, which sponsored the show.

The prime quality sought for a telephone booth is aesthetie," a ministry bulletin explains. "It must suit the environment, its transparency must give a sense of lightness, its windows must be easy to clean and offer visibility to discourage malefactors . . .

What I seek in a telephone booth," said a man in a pork-pie hat who was making very careful notes, "is spaciousness and rationality and a sense of isolation." His favorite was No. 10, a French model 2.19 meters tall with the stark word TELEPHONE written across its top and a price tag of 1,350 france plus tex. The man in the porkpie hat went into the booth and pretended to dial. It looked like a swell booth, all

Tastes differ. A lot of art lovers liked a yellow German booth that had an ashtray, but one woman noted you could get squeezed in the door. A capa-cious Swiss model which could easily have held a cow, milkmaid and milking stool, was judged spartan because it had no shelf for packages. There were many arguments over whether Sweden's or Britain's doors worked best, and no one much liked the models that exposed the user's ankles to the secret, but some urgent investigative reporting in the ministry's office on the exhibition. site revealed that Belgium, Germany and France were ahead. The ministry's office also had some fine art work on its walls - things that light up when pressed and graphs about telephones tastefully mounted against a picture of the Effet brochures, including one that showed a man in althoughte gesticulating furiously toward the mouthpiece of a public telephone. Perhaps that wasn't the artist's intention, but that's what one most often sees French telephons users doing.

The reason for an exhibition of public telephone booths is of course quite simple: It's so wretchedly hard in France to get a phone of one's own. Only 22 per cent of French homes have telephones and the average waiting time, once one has applied for one, is over a year. Real estate agents have been known to gull prospective tenants by putting dummy phones in flats and an employee of this paper had her telephone snatched away to be put, she is sure, in the new Maine Montparnasse office complex. According to an angry consumer group, l'Association Française des Utilisateurs du Teléphone et des Télécommumications (AFUTT), some 2 mil-Hon French people were waiting for telephones last year.
Further, it costs almost four times as much to make a local telephone call in Paris The Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications offers, in Madrid. The monthly rental fee in Paris is about $6 as against addition to its stunning display in New York and the instalof prospective telephone booths, lots of statistics about cables lation fee is less than $15 in New York and over $100 in being laid and the chances Paris. So, France may be lacking in telephones (one desperate Parisian even thought of buying a car and putting it in his apartment, as car telephones are comperatively easy to get, but reason prevailed and, after two and a half years of waiting, he got an ordinary phone), but thanks to this recent show Paris may soon have the best looking public telephone booths in Europe, and that's something.
